Workshop Session

Speakers, Dates and Times¹

1) What is CMS and why should we study it? Critical management research has fragmented over the years in such a way that it is difficult to piece the strands together into something meaningful. This session aims at exploring how we should position ourselves and why should we pursue such a paradoxical project?	4th July 2005 16.00 – 18.00 Umney Theatre, Robinson College Dr. Chris Grey, University of Cambridge (c.grey@jims.cam.ac.uk) Dr Emma Bell, Queen Mary University (e.bell@ qmul.ac.uk)
2) Ethics and CMS More often than not, ethical issues are discussed as purely methodological considerations. However, much management research appears to draw on implicit and unacknowledged ethical commitments. This session explores how questions of ethics can be treated as an explicit issue in management studies. What are the ethics underlying critical management studies? What are the ethical consequences of its findings?	5th July 2005 17.00 – 18.30 Umney Theatre, Robinson College Professor Karen Legge, University of Warwick (karen.legge@wbs.ac.uk) Professor Ralph Stablein, Massey University (r.stablein@massey.ac.nz)
3) Is there professional life after CMS? For those of us who intend to continue within the academic world, there are a number of important issues to be considered. Which institutions are most open to critical perspectives? What are the best paths to jobs within these institutions? For those planning to work outside the academic setting, the session will consider the applications of CMS outside the academy. In what respects does a background in critical management prepare one for managing and being managed? How is it possible to advance a critical agenda through activities outside traditional academic institutions?	6th July 2005 14.00 – 15.30 Umney Theatre, Robinson College Professor Amanda Sinclair, Melbourne Business School (a.sinclair@mbs.edu) Dr. Joanna Brewis, University of Leicester (jpb18@le.ac.uk)
